Are teachers too scared to blow the whistle?
Make language lessons something to shout about

Bring the world into your classroom with a Language Assistant

Inspire a love for languages and boost engagement by bringing learning to life.

Language Assistants enrich classroom activities, providing fresh perspectives as they teach learners about their language and culture. Host schools tell us that conversational practice with a native speaker is central to helping students prepare for speaking and listening exams, while improving performance. Native speakers of French, German, Spanish, Italian and Mandarin, Language Assistants are a great way to enhance language learning at all levels. And most importantly, they provide practical advice and invaluable support to both you and your students during preparation for exams.

Apply now and introduce authentic voices into your language lessons.

Let’s make vocabulary teaching be about more than just words

At the age of 22, I read out the word “façade” as “fakade” in a university seminar and, as the incredulous laughter around me faded, I decided that I was done with a broad vocabulary.

I had been suspicious of unfamiliar words throughout my teens; to me, they always felt exclusionary, like they were designed to leave me out of the conversation. I would come across new arrangements of letters in the books I was reading and I would curse the writer. They were showing off, I believed, at the expense of my comprehension. So I pledged, from an early age, that I would live for simplicity and reduce every word to its most common synonym.

Alas, that’s quite hard to do. As you pick away at language, peeling back the complexity, you don’t always make things clearer. Sometimes, the effect is the opposite. The more you look at language, too, the more you recognise that complexity comes in many guises. It’s not just a more thorough use of a thesaurus that can cause issues but a more careful attention is being given to what happens under the shadow of this debate unfold. Research strongly indicates that a broader vocabulary contributes to better outcomes for those in education. As such, schools are beginning to teach vocabulary more explicitly from a young age – it’s no longer left to individuals to find their own enlightenment through reading books.

This is a good thing, as demonstrated in our ‘How I...’ feature this week. Schools are unpicking what makes effective whole-school vocabulary teaching. This should have a knock-on impact on learning: pupils will be better equipped to access the curriculum, thus, outcomes should improve.

Could we go further, though? How much attention is being given to what happens beyond that utilitarian view of vocabulary as an access tool? A broad vocabulary should enable us to communicate better, to avoid misunderstanding and to improve our wellbeing through a better articulation of our own mental state. Just teaching children words won’t enable any of that to happen.

So, how far are those words cutting through from being “for learning” to being part of conversations taking place beyond the curriculum context?

I learned plenty of words reading Graham Greene and Julian Barnes but I never spoke them aloud. Partly, this was because I didn’t know how, as I had never heard them being used, but it also seemed culturally unwise, even in the classroom: it felt like showing off. Using them with my friends would have been unthinkable, even though I knew many of them would have been reading the same books and be having the same thoughts. How much is now being done to tackle these issues?

A broad vocabulary should also enable us to be better writers, to be able to wield words as if they were the strokes of a paint brush. How far are we teaching pupils not just what these words are but how to use them effectively and selectively? How are we avoiding (and I googled this, by the way) sesquipedalian and prolix prose?

We need to be asking these questions more because we seem to be in danger of slipping into a very mechanistic view of language as a crowbar into learning. Teaching vocabulary is an excellent first step, but we need to go further and teach the application more explicitly, too. If we don’t see the bigger picture as detailed above, then what we are creating is a surface effect, something that looks like learning but really isn’t. You might call it a fakade.

In schools, the word “behaviour” is often used simply to refer to incidents of transgression. The rules are set out and communicated, and anything that contravenes them is labelled as an unwelcome/challenging/disruptive (delete or add as appropriate) behaviour.

It’s an unhelpful habit, according to Amy Forrester, an English teacher and director of pastoral care (key stage 4) in the North West of England.

“The word ‘behaviour’ does not just apply to what is happening during learning time or in the corridors. It’s a more nuanced view of a student’s actions: all of those little things about students we know, because we get to know them so well,” she explains.

It is those “little” things – changes in personality, things that don’t seem quite right, snippets of conversation that may hint at problems – that can tell you so much more than simply tracking the number of detentions a pupil has had or how many times they have ended up in the headteacher’s office. Moreover, when the latter does happen, it is the detail of those incidents that can really make the difference in finding the root cause of the behaviour.

This will be even more important in the post-pandemic education context, where issues that occurred in the past 12 months may bubble up to the surface indirectly in the form of behaviour changes.

Of course, capturing all this detail and all those little moments is not easy – and in a secondary school, where there are multiple teachers for each pupil, it can be particularly challenging. But the data will be crucial to spotting “hidden” issues, Forrester argues.

“I know the dreaded D-word brings out the worst in all of us; the last thing any of us needs right now is more spreadsheets. But if data can be captured in a way that won’t add to workload, it can provide accurate, useful information on patterns that may be occurring – and this is precisely the information that we need as pastoral leaders,” she says.

This is where schools’ new-found relationship with tech can be helpful, she believes. "Using simple and intuitive software can be a game changer when it comes to student behaviour, with a data-informed approach allowing us to make the right decisions about what our students need," she explains.

Getting the right tech is crucial, though. Forrester says that schools need to find a solution that best suits their requirements:

“Some schools may need a simple way of recording reward and behaviour points, while others may need a system that can communicate with home in one click. Others may need something internal, that all staff can use, to record any emerging behaviour issues. So shop around for the one that will best fit your needs.”

Schools also need to ensure that everyone knows what to record and how often: this can’t be a workload drain. “Once you get to grips with how these programmes work, you can often make them do whatever you need in one click. In the past, for example, we’ve created a simple way for staff to indicate whether a child has settled into the academic year or not,” she says.

And finally, Forrester argues that you need to supplement the data with other information. Linking into safeguarding portals or other pastoral tools, she says, can bring really significant insights.

“Joining these tools together can ensure that you have a view of the whole student, from their behaviour and punctuality through to their emotional issues that staff can record their concerns about. This will ensure students are offered the support they need,” she says.

Technology is often criticised for depersonalising the world but, in this case, it may just be the key to a more personal approach to behaviour in a challenging post-pandemic landscape.

Could we learn from China’s ‘less is more’ approach to contact time?

In the packed timetables of UK schools, there is little time given over to teachers for reflection, training or the honing of their skills. Usually, any free period that threatens to become a reality is gobbled up by a cover lesson or a pressing school emergency. An hour of one’s own remains elusive.

David Mansfield discovered that things did not have to be this way. When he left his role as a head of an East London comprehensive to lead an international school in China, he found that running a school was not only possible with much less teacher contact time, it was actually better for all involved.

In China, he explains, contact time is as low as 40 per cent in some state schools. In the international schools in the country, it is a little higher but still hovers around the 60 per cent mark. The reason for this is that it is widely understood that teaching well requires time for planning, preparation and assessment.

“Hence Chinese (and expat) teachers have comparatively low teaching loads, which inevitably focuses their planning and enhances their delivery,” says Mansfield.

This is not left to chance – there is no shooting off for a nap in the PE cupboard when you are meant to be doing prep work.

“Schools insist that individual departments have an in-built regime of observation and designated time for joint planning is provided, again ensuring high quality,” says Mansfield.

The benefits are not just in better planned lessons. Mansfield says that the low contact time allows a fast turnaround on marking and assessment, and hence more responsive teaching.

“Lower contact time also allows feedback to be more personalised,” he adds. “It is common to see small groups of students meeting their teachers out of formal lesson time, in breakout groups or individually, to review material and ensure mastery.”
So long, remote teaching: it was ‘fun’ while it lasted

Picture the scene: you’re ready for a day of remote learning, dressed in business casual from the waist up, jogging bottoms and slippers on your bottom half. You’ve cleared the immediate area behind you of the detritus of daily life, so Year 10 have nothing to giggle about when they are “surface snooping”.

You’ve logged into Teams or Satchel or Zoom, and you’re ready to start the day’s remote learning when you notice things seem quiet. Too quiet, actually. Because when you have two children under 4, silence is not golden. It’s deeply ominous.

It was only last week that I received a text from my husband (from the sanctuary of his real-life office) asking how the day was going, followed by a CCTV screen grab of the bottom of our garden, where my youngest (age 1) was wandering, unsupervised, poking at a worm with a stick and living his best free-range life. The rest of the day was spent with him coiled around my shoulders, clinging on like a little spider monkey as I held meetings and checked Macbeth quizzes.

At the time, I couldn’t wait for remote teaching to end, but now that I’m reflecting on it, perhaps there were some good bits in there, too.

No morning rush hour was a major pro. No one in my house missed that mad spell of the morning when there were fights over the wearing of socks, when there was scrambling for packed lunches that would pass muster for the dinner ladies at preschool, or when we were performing the dance/wrestle of the seatbelt as I frantically tried to get both children strapped into the car.

We all stayed in our pyjamas longer of a morning than was acceptable pre-lockdown, and, yes, a lot more pre-8am telly was watched. But it was nice to take mornings at a more leisurely pace. Beginning meetings and lessons online meant no one could know that the kitchen floor was a sea of Cheerios and discarded toy trains.

Another definite tick in the homeworking box was how resilient I became. Balancing the demands of childcare with remote education required a deft handling of time, energy and quick thinking. Although exhausting, there was something empowering about completing another day wrangling two children, four online lessons, a meeting, phone calls with parents and a deadline.

Third on my list of great things to come out of lockdown is the growth of new family traditions. With the commute reduced to a few steps, we found new ways to mark the end of the working week. Enter the pizza kitchen disco on Fridays. What started as a way to fend off endless requests for snacks and entertainment morphed into the best part of the lockdown working week. Come 4pm, the laptop went away, the oven went on and Alexa was charged with providing 1990s dance hits that were cheesier than the pizza toppings. It’s a big ask for small children to be quiet for hours at a time, so providing a time to kick back and expend some energy was powerful for all of us.

Most of all, though, juggling working from home and small children taught me that balance is key and that we really are flexible, adaptable and resilient beyond anything we thought before. We need to recognise and congratulate ourselves for that.

Laura May Rowlands is head of English at a secondary school in Hampshire.

This is quite a contrast to how things work in the UK, so how do British teachers cope?

“Staff who had been overwhelmed by workload in Western contexts found their love of teaching rekindled,” says Mansfield. “They have creative space to think and plan properly. Time for extracurricular extensions and to engage with the students is the norm. Time in the classroom is appreciated and looked forward to, rather than being seen as the endless slog caused by inflated timetables in the UK.”

Of course, the luxury of time depends on more teachers being in schools and that, in turn, requires more cash. As things currently stand, this seems unlikely in the UK. So are the contact-time levels in China nothing more than a pipe dream for those on these shores?

Mansfield hopes not. “China provides a powerful example that less can often be more,” he says. “It’s a challenge for schools everywhere to consider.”
The 2021 awards season continues

Have you made the shortlist?

It’s time to reveal the schools and projects that have been shortlisted for each category in the Tes Independent School Awards 2021, the most hotly anticipated event in the education calendar. Champagne flutes at the ready...

The contenders for the Tes Independent School Awards are revealed today after a hugely challenging year. Despite such difficult circumstances, they have risen to the challenge, using technology, creativity and a lot of hard work to ensure that students have felt supported and been able to flourish. While the usual glittering ceremony to celebrate their achievements can’t go ahead as we’d like, the winners will be announced at an online ceremony on 30 April, where we will all raise a (virtual) glass to celebrate teachers’ and school leaders’ dedication and enthusiasm over the past 12 months.

Congratulations to everyone shortlisted. Amid fierce competition, the initiatives and projects at these schools really stood out. In honouring them, we hope that we can be a conduit for best practice to be shared in a year in which it is more important than ever.

Kate Clanchy

Clanchy Clanchy is a novelist, poet, playwright and also a teacher, who has worked in schools in Oxford, Essex and Scotland. She won the Orwell Prize for Political Writing in 2020 for her book Some Kids I Taught and What They Taught Me, and has also published several other award-winning books and short stories, including The Not-Dead and the Saved, which won the 2009 BBC National Short Story Award.

She spoke with Tes for the My Best Teacher podcast about her time in school, the teachers who made an impression on her and a rather memorable French exchange trip.

1. Where did you go to school?
   I went to a very large, grant-aided private school in Edinburgh called George Watson’s College. At the time it was the largest school in Scotland, I think – 2,400 pupils, which is a lot.

   Some people go into teaching because they want to recreate the experience they had, some go into it because they want to make something better. I wanted to make something different and better.

2. And who was your favourite teacher?
   I had good English teachers and a great Classics teacher, whom I liked very much, but the teacher I remember the most fondly taught me biology – she was called Mrs Smith.
   I am not very good at biology or science but she explained things very clearly, and she taught me to be secure. Most of my education was overshadowed by my dyspraxia, dyscalculia and dyslexia, all of which were undiagnosed.

   People thought I was just a clever person who was holding out on them or not trying very hard but, actually, there were a number of things I couldn’t do at all, so I was always trying to cover that up.

   Sometimes I was very good at things and didn’t understand why, and sometimes I made a complete mess of things and didn’t understand why.

   But in biology, it did appear that if I attended what Mrs Smith said and followed what she was telling me, I could learn and feel very secure in the learning process.

3. Are there any lessons you recall particularly well?
   We did a lot of experiments. We did chopping up the rat, which I can still remember – with the rat’s little jewel-like innards and its neat little face – and we did popping out the lens of a bull’s eye.

   I understand what is going on with the Covid news much better because of Mrs Smith.

4. Did you ever keep in touch with her afterwards?
   It wasn’t that kind of relationship and I think that is one of the things
I liked about it. I had teachers who liked me too much and it was oppressive. Of course, to some extent it’s nice to be warm and see yourself in pupils.

But to invest in your students, and want them to imitate you and be your disciple is very dodgy, and I think having a highly appropriate distance was something I also learned from [Mrs Smith].

5. What was it like going to school in that part of Scotland?
My school was very good at taking you out to the Scottish mountains and they did special projects in Year 9, where everyone went for a couple of weeks and stayed in rough hostels and ran up mountains. It taught me how to be safe on a mountain and how to choose boots and be confident. That was something [the school] did very well.

Almost every second weekend you could go on some trip or other, [such as to] Skye and the Highlands. I don’t know whether health and safety would intervene now but those were very good times and very good learning experiences.

6. What about any overseas trips?
I went on a very good French exchange. I was sent off for three weeks to a lycée in the middle of Paris and we had to speak French. That was a tremendous learning experience.

Three weeks is a lot of time but we thought it was normal. We did three weeks in Paris, and the French exchange students did three weeks in Scotland. God knows what they thought.

I remember how sophisticated and beautiful some of the French students were. Edinburgh and Paris are comparably beautiful but I think that those students were much more sophisticated and relaxed and better dressed than we were.

7. Were there any memorable moments during those exchanges?
There was a girl called Natalie who had a small rose tattooed just below her left buttock – and the queue of boys who wanted to take her to our school dance…

She said “ooh, la la” just like they did in the French books. It must have seemed extraordinary!

8. Given your success as a writer, did you enjoy English at school?
I was good at English and I had very enthusiastic English teachers [but] although I was in private education, we were in a class of 30, sitting in wooden desks on iron frames, in alphabetical order, and writing essays about Macbeth. It wasn’t this discursive, lounging-about subject that people imagine, like in The History Boys, for example.

There was no place for creative writing. There was an element of [creative] writing but it wasn’t taught. I think I regret that, for myself and so many kids, that you can’t do more creative writing.

Young people can write and they learn through writing, and I think it’s a shame that English has been narrowed down to literary criticism. Literary criticism is interesting but it’s only one branch of English. There are so many others, and writing is so much more natural and organic and right for kids to do.

We should be doing more but it’s almost forbidden. It’s not quite illegal but there is no reward for writing any kind of poem in the English exam system.

9. Do you think you were an easy pupil to teach?
I was overly emotional, weepy, bullyable, occasionally enormously stubborn – so not that easy, no!

I told people they were wrong. I told my French teacher he shouldn’t throw chalk, I got into a huge row about that and said that was wrong. I told my history teacher his methodology was rubbish as well. It must have been very annoying to suddenly have the weird person at the back of the class telling you that you were wrong.

10. Did you ever break the rules?
I did occasionally run away from cross-country running. You’d start the cross-country run and then go down the shops with your friends and have a little stroll, and come back and run in at the end. I think people expected you to do that…it’s not the worst sin that was ever committed!

Kate Clanchy’s latest book, How to Grow Your Own Poem, is available now, published by Pan Macmillan. She was talking to Dan Worth, senior editor at Tes.
Battleground of the sexes

For some, single-sex schools are centres of excellence. For others, they entrench sexual stereotypes and gender inequality. Sifting through centuries of debate, girls’ school deputy head David James ponders the future of this approach in a society that is increasingly progressive, meritocratic and diverse.
Winchester College’s recent decision to admit girls into its sixth form from 2022 came after 122 years of discussion (which the headteacher, Tim Hands, dryly described as “speedy for us”). It made headlines around the world but also raised some questions. Most obviously: what does it say about us that, even during a pandemic, an event as seemingly unimportant as a change in the internal admissions policy of a school that charges tens of thousands of pounds a year can result in acrimonious online debate, and generate news stories in tabloids and broadsheets alike?

No doubt the familiar provocations of class and elitism play into much of the confected outrage. But deeper than this is the perennial debate about single-sex schools. For many, these schools are a hot-button issue: they are institutions that perpetuate, at best, misunderstanding and, at worst, bigotry. But, for others, they are places of pastoral and academic excellence, which allow their pupils to flourish as themselves rather than being defined – and perhaps reduced – by the opposite sex.

Most schools are co-educational and there are many who resort to the old adage that, because life is “co-ed”, so must schools be. But just because something trips off the tongue neatly, and seems to provide a quick answer to endless complex questions, that does not necessarily mean it is right, or right for all occasions or in each community. How many of those condemning the very existence of single-sex schools in the home counties would seek to close down, for instance, Tauheedul Islam Girls’ High School in Blackburn, which empowers its students to make outstanding progress and achieve excellent academic results?

The more an issue becomes politicised, the more divisive it appears to be to all those who are not deeply invested in it. Such, undoubtedly, is the case with gender and education today. The education of girls and boys is, of course, an ancient and familiar area of controversy. Many would agree with Baroness Hale of Richmond, who recently observed that single-sex education should be compulsory for girls but forbidden for boys. This is a witty and familiar articulation of inverted prejudice that sees co-education as an essential, civilising process for boys, rather than something that benefits girls. Removing the male gaze, albeit only for a few hours each day, is an appealing prospect for a lot of parents and their daughters, especially in the context of today’s almost relentless online sexualisation.

After more than 20 years of teaching in co-educational schools, I am now in my first year in a girls’ school. I have found that single-sex education allows space for the students to focus on themselves and learning, and to not be forcibly reminded of appearance or image.

This does not mean, of course, that preconceptions about gender melt away, or that children are entirely insulated from the prejudices and myths associated with the constructions of masculinity or femininity. But single-sex schools can allow these incipient influences to be kept at bay and for energy to be diverted elsewhere.

Or, as Jenny Brown, the headteacher of City of London School for Girls, puts it: “This is going to sound paradoxical but, nonetheless, it is only from escaping oneself by immersing into knowledge – and learning about what is bigger, brighter, better than oneself – that one can, in fact, truly find oneself and work out what on earth you are to do and become.”

Experts and non-experts alike have long argued over whether there are innate differences between the sexes, which necessitate different approaches to teaching them, as well as different areas of interest to engage them. Some ascribe (or project) different characteristics to girls and boys for a number of reasons: some are personal, some political, or religious or social, and many, in different ways, attempt to justify themselves with evidence. Meanwhile, many approaches are self-serving, trotted out to sustain other, wider and often prejudiced views of human interaction.

A simple phenomenon

How much of what is argued about is true? It is difficult to say because it appears almost impossible to be both objective and specialist in such a complex and emotive area.

In an 1810 review of a tome entitled Advice to Young Ladies on the Improvement of the Mind, the philosopher Sydney Smith wrote: “A great deal has been said of the original difference of capacity between men and women...As long as boys and girls run about in the dirt, and trundle hoops together, they are both precisely alike. If you catch up one half of these creatures, and train them to a particular set of actions and opinions, and the other half to a perfectly opposite set, of course their understandings will differ, as one or the other sort of occupations has called this or that talent into action. There is surely no occasion to go into any deeper or more abstruse reasoning in order to explain so very simple a phenomenon.’

But this apparently simple phenomenon of nurture dominating (and explaining) nature continues to be debated everywhere, from social media to daytime television studios, in schools and in universities.

Simon Baron-Cohen, professor of developmental psychopathology at the University of Cambridge, recently wrote that “the female brain is predominantly hard-wired for empathy, the male brain is predominantly hard-wired for...building systems”. Such views would be vociferously supported by the readers who, in the past, enthused about Men Are From Mars, Women Are From Venus, or who, today, dog-ear pages in Jordan Peterson’s 12 Rules for Life. And sexual stereotypes persist in even the most liberal and progressive societies, with damaging consequences for both sexes. As psychologist Cordelia Fine reminds us in Delusions of Gender: “Automatic associations of the categories ‘male’ and ‘female’ are not a few flimsy strands linked to ‘penis’ and ‘vagina’.

Measures of implicit associations reveal that men, more than women, are implicitly associated with science, maths, career, hierarchy and high authority. In contrast, women, more than men, are implicitly associated with the liberal arts, family and domesticity, egalitarianism and low authority.” All of which could be an argument for co-educational schooling. Give a girl the same opportunities as a boy in a non-selective school, teach them the same subjects in the same way, and we will, presumably, stand a better chance of establishing a meritocratic society: some will succeed and some won’t, but any differences will be evened out across a diverse and full curriculum. And such differences, rather than being exacerbated in a single-sex school, will be reduced by exposure to the opposite sex and their innate differences. Hopefully (the argument goes) their strengths will be observed and emulated, their weaknesses compensated for by reflection and improvement from all, including themselves. Or, as Maria Grey and Emily Shireff, the founders of the Girls’ Day School Trust, wrote in 1872, it is essential that girls widen the scope of their interests in order to begin not only to meet their own ambitions but also to fully understand those around them.

“When [women] learn to extend their sympathies beyond the drawing-room or the nursery, to all that affects the wellbeing of their fellow-creatures,” they wrote, “when the treasures of knowledge are opened to them with all the wonders of the past and the hopes of the future, and they are able to take an interest in all that is worthy to excite the free life of thought and feeling.”

The Girls’ Day School Trust and other early pioneering girls’ schools in England (including Cheltenham Ladies’ College, North London Collegiate School, Lady Eleanor Holles, Roedean School and James Allen’s Girls’ School) were established to provide a full education in a broad, challenging, curriculum – equal to that of boys – as part of the political and social fight for female equality.

You could, however, argue that this struggle for equality has been largely achieved, with girls outperforming boys at every educational stage in this country.

Into a new era

So, should boys and girls be educated differently in the 21st century? Perhaps such a question could become obsolete – or at least anachronistic – not only because many of the divisions between the sexes have been rendered either redundant or illegal but because today’s young people increasingly see gender as something unfixed; a spectrum that incorporates a variety of identities.

For some commentators, dividing education along male-female lines represents a sexual apartheid in schools. For those such as US psychologist Diane Halpern, not only do single-sex schools offer no advantages but they risk enforcing sexual stereotypes and sexist views in those who attend them.

Such claims are difficult to prove. Prejudices may be expressed in school, or later in life, but they may not originate in those classrooms and corridors. It is equally difficult to verify the various studies claiming that girls educated in single-sex schools do better than their male peers in similar establishments: there are too many variables, including wider social and family contexts, contributing to such outcomes.

Single-sex schools have clearly met a historical need but how prepared are they now for the more meritocratic, diverse and progressive societies in which they often exist?

Perhaps that question is tendentious because we surely have not yet reached the stage when the absence that has characterised much of female history has been superseded by a new, full and equal distribution of influence; where women’s voices are not only heard alongside men’s but have the same degree of autonomy and agency. There remains a vital difference between speaking and being heard.

And, as the recent killing of Sarah Everard – and the heartbreaking stories that so many girls and women were compelled to share in its wake – showed, there is much still to do, in all schools, and in society. True equality seems a long way off, regardless of how many A levels and degrees women obtain.

In 1949, Simone de Beauvoir wrote: “Humanity is male and man defines woman not in herself but as relative to him; she is not regarded as an autonomous being...She is defined and differentiated with reference to man and not he with reference to her; she is the incidental, the inessential as opposed to the essential.”

How much has changed since then? How much progress have we made when women still feel unsafe, and when they are exposed to daily abuse? It shames us all. When a boys’ school announces that it will accept girls, it is the continuation of a familiar narrative: an old story of girls and women being given permission to enter, of being added to the male rather than existing autonomously. That script still needs to change – and our schools can create the authors of the future who will help to write it.

Whistleblowers do the vital job of keeping any sector on the straight and narrow. But when it comes to schools, just how hard is it to sound the alarm if a colleague has broken the law or put someone’s health and safety at risk? Jessica Powell reports
I wish I could tell you my real name or share the intimidation I’ve experienced. But I can’t. I have been told to keep silent. I blew the whistle on malpractice in my school and people say I’ve done the right thing, but have I? I have anxiety and depression. My reputation has been threatened. Who have I done the right thing by?”

Sarah* (a pseudonym) had planned to quit her job after years of being ground down by her headteacher’s bullying behaviour. But the handling of a safeguarding issue so alarmed her that she felt compelled to speak out. So, she teamed up with a group of other staff, who confided in her that they, too, wished to raise concerns – about issues that included being forced to fabricate exam results – and together they went to the school governors.

“We were scared, but the whistleblowing policy of the school said they would not tolerate any victimisation of whistleblowers,” says Sarah. That proved not to be true, however. The headteacher left, citing “personal reasons”, without any action being taken against her – but, since that day, Sarah and her colleagues have faced anonymous harassment and attacks on their reputation, including slurs circulated to the school community. The teachers concerned are convinced they are coming from the disgruntled former head. However, they’ve been told by the governors that they can’t say anything publicly about what’s happened.

“I’m not allowed to defend myself,” says Sarah. “Because of people trying to brush things under the carpet, it’s snowballed out of control. It’s a total mess.”

Whistleblowing in any industry is difficult but, in the collegiate, tightly knit, trust-based profession of teaching, it is particularly complex. Work and life intertwine in teaching, with threads running into and over other threads. And yet, speaking truth to power, exposing malpractice and raising concerns is arguably more crucial in education than in other sectors: children’s futures are at stake.

As such, you would hope that the experience of Sarah is an anomaly. You would hope that, in most schools, whistleblowing is made as easy as possible and that those exposing the truth are protected. Unfortunately, though, that does not seem to always be the case.

It’s hard to get a clear picture of how common whistleblowing is in education. The whistleblowing advice body, Protect, received almost 400 enquiries from the education sector in 2020. If each of those queries came from an individual school, then that would mean that teachers in just 0.01 per cent of UK schools were seeking to blow the whistle last year.

Of course, that’s only one source of information, but there is other evidence that suggests speaking out about malpractice is rare in schools. Kate Atkinson, head of advice at the NAHT school leaders’ union, says members looking for guidance on whistleblowing is not that common.

“Most employers are good, they follow the law and, if a whistleblowing disclosure has been made correctly, most are thankful and will take absolutely no action against that employee,” she says.

But is whistleblowing rare in education because the majority of schools give no reason for their staff to speak up; because cases tend not to reach unions or organisations such as Protect; or because staff are too scared to speak up?

What counts as whistleblowing?

It’s worth noting that whistleblowing has quite a narrow definition: there are strict rules around what counts as whistleblowing and how to go about it.

First up, to have a legitimate whistleblowing case, the law is clear that “the wrongdoing must be in the public interest. This means it must affect others, for example the general public.”

So, just because you think your boss is being horrible to you, it doesn’t necessarily give you grounds to blow the whistle on them. For this, you would need to go down other routes with HR or union officials. (As previously reported in Tes, we know anecdotally that instances of bullying among staff are almost certainly under-reported.)

Next, only a few specific complaints fall under the umbrella of whistleblowing:

- A criminal offence: for example, fraud.
- Someone’s health and safety being in danger.
- Risk or actual damage to the environment.
- A miscarriage of justice.
- A company breaking the law.
- Someone covering up wrongdoing.

“The other thing is you have to approach blowing the whistle in accordance with your workplace policy and the law,” stresses Atkinson.

For those in a state distressed enough to need to whistleblow, this is a lot of information to process on top of an already overflowing workload. That is why seeking advice is key.

If you do jump through all the hoops and blow the whistle, in theory, the law protects you from being treated unfairly or losing your job as a result.

But it’s important that you make the complaint, in the first instance, to your employer (following their whistleblowing policy if they have one) – or to an external regulatory body if you’re concerned about how your employer will respond (on gov.uk, you can find a list of prescribed bodies you can report to).

By contrast, if, for example, you went straight to a newspaper, you’d likely lose your legal protection.

“We’d always recommend that people protect themselves by going to their union, ACAS (the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service), Citizens Advice or a lawyer, to arm themselves in terms of being clear about what they’re doing before whistleblowing,” says Atkinson.

It’s vital you go to the right person, in the right way, to benefit from protection. However, the fact that you are obliged to go to your employer first, if possible, makes legal sense but little practical sense. When a teacher reaches the point of becoming a whistleblower, it is likely that the conditions in the school are such that going directly to the employer with a claim would be asking a lot.

Fiona* describes how the toxic culture in her previous school meant that she would have been too terrified even to go near the whistle: “I used to cry on my way to work. I would not have felt confident to raise any concern about how the school was being run or anything going on within it.”

She acknowledges that this meant that the problem went unaddressed, but she feels she had little choice. “If you feel you’re in a school where you cannot raise any concerns, that’s a massive detriment to the children,” she says.

Of course, whistleblowing may not always be optional, notes Atkinson: “In certain circumstances – for example, child protection or fraud – you may have a contractual duty as a teacher to raise your concerns.”

If you do feel you are able to raise the alarm, the good news, say the experts in this area, is that most organisations will do the right thing. But many argue that there needs to be more protection for whistleblowers as, in some cases, the organisation – including schools – acts very badly.

Katherine*, who undertakes freelance training in schools, has seen this at first hand. “I know of deputy heads who were brilliant but, because they’ve spoken up about something they thought wasn’t right in the school, they’ve found themselves on a capability procedure because the head wanted to protect their own reputation,” she says.

Barrister Andrew Faux, director of Lawyers for Teachers, agrees that, unfortunately, this does happen. “The legal theory is all lovely but, if you’re in a relatively small workplace, and the people you’re complaining about are your managers, what do you think it’s going to be like working there going forward?”

It’s not just fear of the organisation behaving badly that stops teachers whistleblowing, though, but the close-knit nature of the teaching community.

“In a school, you may have to whistleblow on people you know incredibly well and have worked with closely. You may also live in the same community,” notes Atkinson.

“In bigger organisations, it’s sometimes easier to whistleblow because it feels less personal.”

Faux also believes there are particular pressures in the education sector. “I’ve come across cases in schools where, for example, they get students to learn rote passages for oral exams,” he says. “Now, is that cheating? It feels like cheating. But then you realise everyone does it. So, if you didn’t do that with your kids, then they wouldn’t do very well against the cohort.”

“Cheating” is a particularly complex area of whistleblowing. If a teacher got wind of malpractice in their school, should they whistleblow? And on whom? The newly qualified teacher who’s doing it? The head of department who told them to? The headteacher who’s laying on the pressure to achieve certain grades? The government? Where does the buck stop?

The other challenge for teachers is just how precious reputations are in education. First, there is the school’s reputation: when it takes a substantial knock, it can take a generation to recover from that and, in the meantime, all the teachers and pupils in the school suffer. That’s a lot of responsibility to take on.

What to do if a colleague blows the whistle on you

If someone takes whistleblowing action against you, when you believe you have done nothing wrong, Andrew Faux, director of Lawyers for Teachers, says that the most important thing is not to panic. “Don’t rush to respond to allegations,” he says. “If you need to, vent your annoyance, distress and anger – but not towards colleagues. Don’t be afraid or ashamed to speak to a counsellor.”

Seeking and listening to advice is crucial, he adds, as long as you remember that, when doing this, you ultimately will have to make your own decisions. “People need to take advice – from their union, their lawyer, their friend, whoever – but some people then blindly follow the advice and blame the adviser when it goes wrong.”

“When I advise, I always remind people that it’s their life and they know the details better than me,” he explains.

Finally, Faux suggests only engaging with any investigation that is taking place when you feel calm, if possible. “And don’t assume the investigating officer knows anything; explain everything,” he adds.
on your shoulders as a whistleblower, particularly as most people in that school will be entirely blameless.

And then there is also your own reputation. “In the government’s statutory guidance, Keeping Children Safe in Education, it sets out that a school must take a reference from your last employer before hiring you,” says Faux. “But if you left in complicated circumstances – you’re saying they sacked you because you blew the whistle but they’re saying you were sacked for some other reason – you’re going to have to disclose all this and that school has got to be willing to run the risk of taking you on.”

And the impact can be even more far-reaching than just your next teaching post, suggests Fiona – it could affect your entire career.

“If you whistleblow openly, in some environments it might make it really difficult for you to ever work again,” she argues. Technically, anonymity is an option. If you blow the whistle, you can request confidentiality and the person/body you’ve told should make every effort to protect your identity. But, in reality, this isn’t always easy.

“You have to be honest with someone who’s thinking about whistleblowing – it’s usually very obvious who they are from what they know,” notes Richard Tanton, director of member support at the Association of School and College Leaders.

And many teachers may feel that they cannot trust the internal lines of communication, Katherine points out.

“In one school, the governors were all the head’s friends, so when a colleague did raise a complaint to the chair of governors, [the chair] went straight to the head with it,” she says.

Blatant breaches of confidentiality and attempts to ruin someone’s reputation don’t sound like the kind of protection a whistleblower should be getting under law – and they’re not. But to fight back against any detriment you think you’ve incurred from whistleblowing, you usually have to take the case to an employment tribunal.

“You have to suffer the detriment or dismissal and then try to remedy that under the law,” explains Atkinson.

When Katherine got caught up in a whistleblowing case herself, she couldn’t face that. “If I’d felt a bit braver at the time, I might have taken legal action. But, sometimes, you just feel too worn down by it,” she says.

Even if you steel yourself, there’s no guarantee of success.

“Those cases are very hard because what you’re presenting as a lawyer is, at some level, a conspiracy theory – that everybody is out to get your client,” says Faux. “And it’s very hard to prove unless you have a golden nugget of evidence in an email or something.”

Plus Atkinson notes that while “softer” repercussions – such as people ignoring you in the staffroom – may not warrant a tribunal, they can still hurt.

An open culture

In Sarah’s case, things are even more complicated. The detriment she’s suffered hasn’t been at the hands of her current employer. “Now we’re being told that, as the ex-head is not an employee anymore, there’s only so much the school can do,” she explains. “And we’re like, ‘wait a minute, your reassurance didn’t come with a caveat’.”

Unfortunately, Atkinson confirms that “it is very difficult if someone is no longer in the control of the employer. You’re not protected under the whistleblowing legislation itself. You’re relying upon your employer to assist you more out of good faith”.

Yet for Sarah – and anyone else caught up in a whistleblowing case that has turned sour – it can take a serious toll.

“When you look at research into whistleblowing, the people who tend to do it feel they have to because something is happening that goes against their value basis,” notes Rachel Lewis, registered occupational psychologist from Birkbeck, University of London and director of Affinity Health at Work.

“They really believe the system will work, so when they speak out and they’re met with negative consequences, the impact is felt even harder. They think ‘people will do the right thing’. Spoiler alert: they don’t always.”

And the resulting fallout can be lasting and painful – especially if you go to an employment tribunal.

“You may not get a hearing for years, so you’re embarking upon a long, horrible process with no certainty of outcome,” says Faux.

The impact of all this can be devastating for the whistleblower. “Some will have loss of confidence, loss of enjoyment in their career, anxiety, depression, post-traumatic stress disorder,” says Lewis.

And that then comes full circle and prevents others from whistleblowing in the future.

“What kind of message do you think staff in my school have been sent?” asks Sarah. “The message is, don’t whistleblow – turn a blind eye and keep your mouth shut.”

So, how can we make it more palatable for someone to take up the whistle? As mentioned above, most schools will deal with claims properly, but how can leaders ensure that they have set up the right conditions for whistleblowing to happen?

First, it’s about whole-school culture, argues Tanton. “The more open and less defensive any organisation can be, the better,” he explains. “You want a culture in which people feel free to raise their concerns and they’re taken seriously. I think it’s when people raise legitimate concerns and they don’t seem to be dealt with that things get bigger and bigger, and tend to go astray.”

Atkinson agrees, adding: “I think the law around whistleblowing is pretty much as good as it can get. The process is incredibly difficult for the person that has the whistle blown on them as well, so there needs to be protection on both sides.

“With all these things, you can have great laws in place but it’s the practical implementation on the ground that makes the difference. Part of what can be done by school leaders is reminding people of the policies, and that whistleblowing is encouraged and taken seriously.”
How to be a whistleblower without blowing up your life

“If it’s not something you’re required to whistleblow on, see if you can go down an informal route, raising your concerns with your employer first,” suggests Kate Atkinson, head of advice at the NAHT school leaders’ union.

“This tends to be less of a bomb in the middle of a workplace.” (Seek guidance from your union or a lawyer if you’re unsure if this route is appropriate.)

If colleagues have said they’ll support you, check in with them before taking the plunge, suggests psychologist Rachel Lewis, of Birkbeck, University of London, who is also director of Affinity Health at Work: “There are cases where people have said they’d support a whistleblower but, in reality, they don’t.

“So, check whether they just support your complaint in principle or if you actually have their support for the whistleblowing itself.”

This won’t give you any additional legal protection, but may give you a sense of safety in numbers. However, Atkinson warns against actively drumming up support.

“I wouldn’t recommend asking people if they’ve witnessed X doing Y. For one, you haven’t whistleblown yet so you haven’t got that legal protection.

“Secondly, you need to be careful of doing anything that could be seen as tipping off the person you might whistleblow against, as they could cover up their actions.”

Atkinson also notes that you could face criticism for delaying if you’re also claiming the situation was sufficiently serious to whistleblow on.

Finally, Lewis suggests that, if you go ahead and do blow the whistle, “write down why you went into this, what you want to achieve, and what would be too much for you – for example, an employment tribunal might be where you’d draw the line”.

Doing this might help to anchor you in the storm that may follow.

This kind of open culture is one that Fiona has happily found in her current school.

“You would always feel uncomfortable whistleblowing. But you could do it in my school and it would be dealt with sensitively,” she says. “And if the tables were turned and the whistle was blown on me, I know they would want to hear my side. They wouldn’t just come down on me like a ton of bricks.”

Faux believes that it would be helpful here if whistleblowing could be “rebranded” at a policy level. “I think it’s an unfortunate term because, to me, it’s the Fat Controller blowing his whistle and pointing his finger and saying ‘aha, caught you!’ We don’t want a working environment that has a sort of surveillance culture,” he argues.

“Of course, if there’s a case of serious misconduct, consequences have to flow from that. But, ideally, you want an environment where it’s well understood that mistakes are sometimes made, which others can learn from and where, if someone makes a professional misjudgement, they are empowered to self-disclose that.”

Sarah admits that she has certainly found the identity of “whistleblower” uncomfortable.

“It makes you sound like a grass or a snitch. Even when you know you’re disclosing something that needs to be disclosed, it makes it sound like you’re somehow the one causing a problem,” she says.

In all of this, it’s important to recognise that Sarah’s case is extreme. “In the five to six years I’ve worked in this role, I can’t remember a huge number of people we’ve advised to go ahead with whistleblowing and I can’t remember a single case of a member suffering detriment as a result,” says Tanton.

However, it is also important to recognise that we are almost certainly underestimating the number of potential whistleblowing cases in the UK in education – and that there will also be many teachers who haven’t gone through with whistleblowing purely for the reasons laid out in this article.

Those who have been involved in whistleblowing say that this situation is harmful to the profession and to the pupils, teachers and other staff within our schools.

They believe schools need to make changes to ensure better protection for individual teachers. We tell children to speak up when they see wrongdoing and we create the conditions to ensure that is possible. Isn’t it time we made sure school staff have the same incentive and protection?

Unsettling feelings can trigger a fight-or-flight stress response that can impact on teaching and learning, researchers warn. Irena Barker ponders what schools can do to make pupils and staff feel more secure in these unpredictable times.

In 2013, academics looking at the psychology of dread carried out a seemingly cruel experiment. After attaching electrodes to the backs of 35 participants’ hands, they offered each person the choice between receiving a sharp electric shock immediately or waiting for a milder one. The researchers (Giles Story et al, 2013) found that 70 per of the time, the participants opted to receive more painful shocks right away. Anticipating an unpleasant experience was seemingly deemed worse than the experience itself.

This, and other similar experiments, illustrate that humans have a natural disposition to prefer certainty over uncertainty – whether that certainty is a nasty zap to the hand or, for example, terrible news about yourself or others. Certainty means that we are able to plan and work out how we can handle a situation – and, ultimately, that makes us feel more in control.

It’s fair to say that few people working in or attending schools will have felt in control of their situation over the past 12 months. It’s not just been the pandemic and its undulating course but the ever-changing government guidance, the endless U-turns over exams and school closures, and the intense anxiety of potentially being exposed to the virus on a daily basis, not knowing if you might catch it.

What impact might all of that uncertainty have had on children when they were learning during the lockdown periods? And how might it impact those in schools now that all students are back in the classroom? Research by evolutionary psychologists (Brosschot, J, Verkuil, B, and Thayer, J, 2018) suggests that when people are exposed to uncertainty, feelings of safety are removed and the human brain reverts to its "default mode" of a fight-or-flight stress response.

Missing safety signals

It is important to note that this response occurs when normal day-to-day safety signals are absent, not just when there is actual physical danger. Imagine, for example, that a stranger is manning the school office rather than the usual Ms Smyth, says Mark Freeston, professor of clinical psychology at Newcastle University, who is leading a study into the relationship between uncertainty and distress in the context of Covid-19.

The direct threat of Covid illness will therefore not have been the only trigger of a fight-or-flight response among those who have attended schools: Freeston says disruption of daily, weekly and seasonal routines – as with lockdown – also leads to feelings of not being safe.

The impact of all this on learning will be direct, he argues. "When the stress response is released, then this impacts on various aspects of cognitive processes, including worry. It competes with resources, affects concentration and leads to fatigue and anxiety – this can impact on working memory," he explains.

Freeston reveals that prolonged uncertainty has also been shown to have an impact on time perception and thus may affect a teacher’s or a pupil’s ability to plan effectively. "A stable time perception with a future-thinking perspective (linking past, present and future) is associated with many positive outcomes across areas of life and across the lifespan – including academic achievement, wellbeing, etc – probably due to the fact that people set future-oriented goals," he explains.

Unfortunately, uncertainty is going to be a fixture of education for some time yet, with the pandemic continuing and “catch-up” prompting huge changes to timetables.

So, how should schools approach making staff and pupils feel safer, and thus less anxious and more able to teach and learn? Children and adults are likely to experience negative effects stemming from feelings of dread but adults may have more experience of dealing with uncertainty, and children may be more reliant on adults to make...

them feel safe, Freeston says. As such, teachers will deal better with the situation in the coming months, but they will need to be even more available to children than they may have previously had to be.

What sort of support is best for those staff or pupils who do feel uncertain and anxious? According to research, the stress response can be inhibited by increasing someone’s perceived sense of security. This is achieved by providing them with “signals of safety”.

For many of us in lockdown, these have come in the form of familiar home comforts, home cooking and the nostalgic viewing of old TV series. In other words, we may be socially isolated, unable to see our parents and fearing for our lives, but there are episodes of Friends and Gilmore Girls to remind us of more certain times.

So, ensuring that as much as possible is familiar to all in the school is crucial. Yes, some things will need to change, but keep as much the same as you can.

If there is a regular weekly event/meeting, retaining it on the schedule could be more important than you think.

“Emphasising what is the same, developing new adapted routines and ways of doing things, and [making] progressive changes, all contribute to re-establishing safety,” says Freeston. “However, when changes happen quickly, [when] directives [come in] from outside, or when communication is poor, then it is hard to maintain the new signs of safety that teachers and parents will have worked hard to re-establish.”

One way to mitigate those inevitable unexpected changes is to make time for socialising. Research suggests that for social animals, such as humans, being part of a group is a crucially important source of safety (Brosschot, J, Verkuil, B, and Thayer, J, 2018), hence our early enthusiasm for Zoom calls.

With both of the above, though, it’s important to consider how “Covid-proof” the plans might be. “If goals are based on specific events and outcomes happening at a specific time, then these will remain vulnerable to outside influences, even as things improve over time,” says Freeston.

Bucket lists aren’t the answer

As such, the creation of “bucket lists of what to do after the pandemic” – as many schools have encouraged children to do – “may not be the antidote” because they depend on an unknowable end to the pandemic itself.

A way around this would be to emphasise gratification in the present, Freeston argues. “Experiencing aspects of the present as pleasurable and fun, despite restrictions, may help anchor people in the present and so re-engage with safety, and a timeline that has a past, a present and a future,” he says.

One helpful way of framing the next few months is to think of it as a transition period, advises Hannah Kinsey, head of training and service design at mental health charity Young Minds.

For example, think of all the things schools do for primary-secondary transition.

“People are quite well versed in putting in place the support structures around those sorts of [stressful] transitions, but what young people are living with at the moment is a year-long transition period of uncertainty, not knowing what is going to come next,” she says. Creating a sense of consistency and connection, she explains, is vital and can provide “an anchor in the storm”.

This, Kinsey says, could come in the form of teachers and other members of staff providing “daily check-ins” for students, particularly vulnerable ones.

“It’s about trying to make sure that you’ve got those touch points with them, having the same people looking out for them, because we know what is really important for young people is knowing that somebody is holding them in mind,” she says.

“It’s about maximising that as much as possible. It could literally be as much as a tiny check-in, just to say, ‘I’ve been thinking about you. I hope it’s going OK’. It doesn’t have to be a whole lesson.”

Talking about ideas around resilience and self-care is important, too, she says – and staff should take “the foot off the pedal a bit” with the academic side to allow this to happen.

So, there are things that a school can try to do in the here and now, but how long after the pandemic has waned might the impact of uncertainty and anxiety continue?

Freeston says that as the Covid uncertainty reduces and things become more predictable, many people will naturally recover and may even have gained resilience in the process.

But he adds that long-term mental health problems can begin with stressful life events.

“So, with more people exposed to more stress, and prolonged stress, there may be more people than usual who may develop mental health problems,” he says.

Like academic recovery, it’s clear that mental wellbeing recovery will be a long-term project with no short-term fixes.

A-level classes are the dream for many teachers but a sudden switch from activity-based GCSE learning to university-style lectures can make the subject a struggle for you and your students, says Shabnam Ahmed

When I was newly qualified, I thought that teaching A level was the holy grail. Not just anybody could do it; this was a privilege that had to be earned through years of experience.

But I worked hard. I was patient. And finally, the time came when I got to teach my first A-level class.

To my surprise, I didn’t like it. Everything I’d hoped teaching would be should have been in that classroom. A-level teaching is the closest you will get to your degree in a secondary school. I’d had visions of students who were intrinsically motivated, intelligent and hardworking.

But it wasn’t like that at all. Teaching A level turned out to be pretty tough. The course was content heavy and the students were needy. As a result, I never looked forward to the lessons and found I was spending hours planning.

In reality, most students select an A-level course not because they love the subject but because it is a stepping stone to what they want to do next (not to mention that students picking your subject because they aren’t actually sure what they want to do next).

It took becoming head of Year 13 to change my mind about teaching A level. Having the opportunity to view these students through a pastoral lens made me realise that my approach to lessons with them was all wrong. The reason I didn’t love teaching A level was because of my own mindset.

We have to remember that Years 12 and 13 are the “bridge” between school and university. That means we have to reach out towards university-style approaches while also making use of school-based methods. A-level learning should be interesting and exciting – this doesn’t happen if you spend all your time lecturing from the front of the room.

I reminded myself that students are students; the same activities I used for GCSE classes would be completely appropriate at A level. I guessed that those familiar methods – along with the added challenge of more complex subject matter and critical readings – might be the best way to ensure progress and engagement.

It turned out I was right. Once I switched up my approach, and replaced my lectures with carousels, reading races and card sorts, I noticed a change in my students – and a change in me.

Suddenly, I found myself absolutely loving teaching A level. I was reading critical theory and journals that I hadn’t read before, and I was excited to discuss them with my class. My students came out with really clever interpretations and their genuine interest began to shine through.

Teaching them was no longer a laborious battle.

Just because A-level students are taking an advanced-level course doesn’t mean they are automatically adult learners. Yes, there is a lot of content. Yes, the content is more complex. But remember, they start the course just three months after completing their GCSEs. Familiar methods will make teaching and learning much more enjoyable for you and your students.

With the right approaches, A level can allow you to explore the subject you love while doing what you’re best at: teaching. Turns out it is the holy grail, after all.

Helped close the vocabulary gap

Getting specialists in subjects other than English to work on boosting students’ literacy can be an uphill struggle, yet Sarah Eggleton managed to introduce a whole-school approach to vocab learning that not only works for teachers but has seen pupils make use of more sophisticated language across the curriculum.

It has never been more important for us to close the “vocabulary gap”; this is one of the big narratives of Covid catch-up. That gap – the difference in the number of words that a child from the richest and poorest homes knows – has a real impact on life chances, and it has reportedly been widening during the coronavirus pandemic.

Yet many secondary schools struggle to work on vital literacy skills in subjects outside of the English department.

When assistant headteacher Sarah Eggleton decided to give literacy a much-needed boost in her school, with a vocabulary push across all departments, she chose to do it via the explicit teaching of high-level language and decoding tools in all classes.

Here, she explains her rationale, the challenges of implementation and the impact that the programme has had on the young people of her inner-city secondary.

Tes: What inspired you to introduce whole-school vocabulary teaching?
Sarah Eggleton: Alex Quigley’s book, Closing the Vocabulary Gap, had a big impact on me, reinforcing that it is the moral imperative of every teacher to improve students’ vocabulary to ensure they have the best possible life chances.

According to research, vocabulary, alongside socioeconomic status, is one of the key factors that determines whether a child will go on to achieve a grade C (now grade 4) at GCSE in mathematics, English language and English literature.

It’s something primary colleagues may take for granted but embedding an effective and consistent approach to teaching literacy in secondary schools is often quite a battle. I’m assistant headteacher and head of English, and I’m supported by a phenomenal headteacher who understands the importance of literacy. I’ve previously worked as a literacy coordinator without the backing of the senior leadership team and the headteacher, and it’s a near-impossible task.

What makes it so hard to get a whole-school approach to literacy teaching right?
Lack of curriculum time has been raised repeatedly by staff; some are adamant that they do not have enough time to devote part of their lesson to teaching vocabulary. Also, while many teachers feel confident delivering reading and writing skills as part of their teaching, they often lack the confidence or knowledge to systematically teach specific skills, such as decoding words, that students need to be able to access texts with increasing independence.

Why did you decide to focus on vocabulary above other literacy areas?
Teaching vocabulary might not seem the most obvious place to start but it is a simple and effective way of improving the literacy of all learners in a way that those who aren’t English specialists can easily apply to their subject.

We decided to pick one technique because we wanted students to instantly feel comfortable and aware of how they learn vocabulary. We reasoned that doing this would enable them to recognise the importance of vocabulary across all subjects because all staff were teaching it the same way. After trialling different approaches, we narrowed it down to one technique for the explicit teaching of vocabulary: the Frayer model.

How does that model work?
Our version of the Frayer model is essentially a 2x2 table with the following four headings:

- My definition
  Here, the teacher introduces the word and the class discusses possible meanings. They explore where their ideas have come from: does it sound or look like a word they’ve heard before? Does it have parts of a word they know, and so on? A student-friendly definition is then displayed and discussed. The teacher removes the definition and students write their own version into their books.

- Etymology/morphology
  This step is crucial and one we’re still working on embedding, as it’s more complicated and takes more time. The teacher explores the prefixes/suffixes or origins of the word to help the students make links to other words they know, so that they can apply this knowledge next time they come across an unknown word that includes the same component. This is the step that most departments have adapted. For example, the science department includes the question, “What other contexts do I see this word in?” to acknowledge that words can have multiple meanings depending on the context. Other subjects adapted it to “use it in a sentence” or “exam board definition”. The drama department uses a “show me” box, so students can physically use the word in application to their work.

- Synonyms and antonyms
  The third and fourth headings are for similar- and opposite-meaning words. These give the students a reference point from which to hinge their understanding of the new word. The students love coming up with their own or identifying them from a given list.

What issues did you face when implementing the approach across the school?

The barrier of curriculum time came up frequently; we accepted the need for flexibility and for adaptations to be made depending on the subject. Some now set completion of the Frayer model for homework after talking through the word in class, for example.

This helps to ease concerns some staff members had that they were shoehorning in something that didn’t suit their subject naturally.

Reaching a point of consistency in identifying and teaching words has been a lot of work. It’s been a process of training, monitoring, training, checking, communicating, evaluating, training, adapting and evaluating again.

Achieving consistency takes relentless effort but we take staff workload seriously, and the goal is to improve literacy via vocabulary in a way that works for our students and staff. We’re still on our journey to achieving that.

What impact have you seen so far?

We completed learning walks of vocabulary teaching to see it in practice, followed up with a student-voice survey looking at the consistency and frequency of teaching.

Results across all monitoring methods were positive and students recognised they were being taught vocabulary across all subjects.

Better than that, though, we noticed the improvement in students’ vocabulary in their writing and responses to texts. Staff remarked with delight upon the sophisticated words students were using confidently and accurately as a result of teaching across the school, not just in English.

Why you should join the culture club

It can be difficult to put a finger on why some schools flourish, even in the face of adversity. For Alex Quigley, the answer lies in a collection of shared behaviours, policies and values that the Covid-19 pandemic has thrown at them. What are the factors that enable teachers to flourish?

In every leadership course, words like “culture” are bandied about with confidence. But when you look a little closer at these terms, when trying to turn them into concrete plans and actions, you are often left with vague notions and little clarity about what to do next.

Many teachers and school leaders are understandably sceptical about abstract constructs, such as “school culture”, that are devised far from the realities of the classroom.

And yet, if we dig into the research evidence around this particular construct, we can learn a great deal about cultivating and sustaining a successful school culture. And during particularly rocky times, like those we are in now, such insights may offer ballast and a renewed sense of direction.

So, what does the research have to say? In a model of organisational culture proposed by Edgar Schein, a US expert in leadership and management, he usefully breaks down what we really mean by “school culture”. He proposes that there are three levels to organisational cultures:

- Artefacts and behaviours: those objects, such as policies or dress codes, that are the visible aspects of a school.
- Espoused values: the shared values we state and reiterate in mission statements, school improvement plans and assemblies.
- Assumptions: the subtle, often unconscious behaviours that are enacted daily, such as how school leaders talk to colleagues, how teachers share ideas and so on.

By breaking down the fuzzy notion of school culture into objects and artefacts, along with values and assumed behaviours, we can get closer to defining culture which, in turn, takes us one step closer towards cultivating a thriving one.

Of course, we need to do more than just talk about school culture. As the saying goes, the school policy must be lived, not laminated.

In school-specific research, again from the US, researchers Matthew Kraft and John Papay explored the question of whether a more “professional” environment in schools can promote teacher development.

Although this research was undertaken before the pandemic, its findings were hugely positive. It found that teachers in schools that were positively rated for having a “professional environment” – that is to say schools with a culture focused on supporting teacher learning – improved significantly more over 10 years than colleagues in schools that were rated as having a less professional environment.

Although school culture might seem like a woolly concept, research suggests that it can really make a difference, at least where teacher development is concerned.

Schools are currently facing enormous challenges, so a focus on culture may not be at the top of many leaders’ to-do lists at the moment. But it is worth considering and reconsidering the small details of our cultures over the coming months. As schools look to thrive and recover, tending to our school culture, and even rewriting it anew, may prove to be vital, positive work.

Give your staff a break from ‘crisis fatigue’

The pandemic has put teachers under relentless pressure – and there’s no end in sight just yet. Lauran Hampshire-Dell considers what school leaders can do to support staff as they continue to combat the mental and physical exhaustion that has become part and parcel of school life.

When schools were first asked to swap real classrooms for virtual ones back in March last year, school leaders – like everybody else – had no idea that this would be the beginning of a seemingly endless cycle of lockdowns and restrictions.

What’s more, they could not begin to predict the impact that this would have on their staff.

Now, one year on from those first school closures, many teachers could be suffering from what psychologists call “crisis fatigue” – a condition caused by sustained exposure to an atmosphere of stress, uncertainty and fear.

There is a huge range of symptoms associated with crisis fatigue, some of which teachers may view as merely typical term-time concerns, with physical and mental exhaustion, sleep pattern alteration, appetite changes and struggling to concentrate all being typical markers.

However, these symptoms appear to be on the rise. In a recent social media survey I conducted of more than 170 teachers, 90 per cent of respondents reported increased mental fatigue, 82 per cent reported changes in their sleep patterns, 79 per cent said they were struggling to concentrate and 95 per cent said that these symptoms have increased over the most recent lockdown.

All these factors are likely to have an impact on teachers’ general wellbeing and their performance in the classroom – and although lockdown is now easing, the pandemic is far from over, which means these problems look set to continue.

So, what can leaders do to help? I asked a range of senior and middle leaders from different sectors across the country for their advice about how to tackle crisis fatigue.

Ditch the meetings

Cutting back on meetings, where possible, is one easy way to buy staff a little more time and space to breathe.

Laura May Rowlands, a head of English in Southampton, says that her school has changed its typical schedule, and "cancelled unnecessary meetings but asked people to attend a short one every week".

Similarly, a middle leader in the North West told me that "meetings only happen now when absolutely necessary".

During lockdown, some schools have been using department meetings as a chance for staff to touch base with each other, with one middle leader telling me that her "department meetings now start with everyone saying how they are" and another saying their weekly meeting is now being used to “just catch up”.

Leadership teams are also thinking about their communications. One head of year in Suffolk says that her team has committed to sending "no leadership emails in the evenings" in a bid to help all staff switch off, while a head of department in Surrey says that her team is now "actively considering whether or not the email needs to be sent; screen time is high enough without unnecessary communications".

Drop the data

Even in a normal term, data drops can create stress but, since the start of the pandemic, the chaos of incomplete classes, atypical assessment methods and the general increase in admin that follows periods of online learning has meant that many schools are rethinking their data reporting for the sake of staff wellbeing.
Katherine Childs, a head of English in Dorset, says that her school has “suspended data drops for most year groups, although we are still doing whole-class feedback, so we have an idea of our students’ progress at home”.

Along with changes to how they gather data, some leaders are choosing to change how assessments are carried out across the school.

This is what has happened at one secondary school in Bournemouth. “As everything is taking longer at the moment, we felt streamlining our assessment process would be better: it’s now just final assessments alongside regular assessment for learning, and we are looking at quizzes instead of lengthy written pieces,” explains a senior leader at the school.

One benefit of the recent periods of online learning is that they have given schools a chance to explore remote assessment methods, some of which involve self-marking and can ease the intense marking burden that teachers face.

In fact, 60 per cent of the teachers I surveyed said that they have used the lockdown period to explore new assessment methods that could help their teams.

Resources, blending and booklets

Collaboration and teamwork have proved vital in helping teachers manage during remote learning and there are many ways that leaders can continue to facilitate collaborative working now that more students are back in schools.

For instance, one school leader told me that their school has been “providing adapted schemes of work, booklets and resources to aid workload”, having “collapsed resources days to help staff”, introduced “clear signposting of upcoming units and resources both online and off” and arranged for staff to take over planning for a year group each “to minimise planning” overall.

Keep the focus on wellbeing

The return to a normal school day also shouldn’t equal the end of any wellbeing initiatives started during lockdown.

Rowlands says her department is going to keep its focus on sharing resources and condensing key notices into weekly bulletins. In addition she will not be reinstating meetings unless they’re really necessary.

Her team is also considering using online meetings as a development tool going forwards. “Morning briefings on Zoom would allow us to access interesting continuing professional development, as I could invite guest speakers in,” she says.

Safeguarding lead Chris East agrees that there are plenty of initiatives that have been introduced in lockdown, which could continue to support wellbeing now that schools are open again more fully.

For instance, his team has been focused on raising awareness of how “the lockdown will have impacted people in many ways, so we are signposting the safeguarding team, explaining how and why we can help”.

He is also thinking about how staff may feel about reintegration, ensuring that there are “regular staff check-ins and points of contact available if the transition back to campus is too much”.

The majority of students may be back in the classroom but, with no certain date for a return to complete normality in sight, it is likely that leadership teams will have to continue to offer additional support to staff struggling with crisis fatigue for some time to come.

Flexibility, patience and empathy will not only help staff to feel more supported but allow them to better support students and their families.

Yet leadership teams will also need support: crisis fatigue can affect anyone and steering the ship through the storm is exhausting. It’s therefore crucial that leaders make time to look after themselves and switch off, too.

Sample our recipe for successful remote learning

Lockdown dealt a crushing blow to catering colleges that rely heavily on practical lessons to develop the next generation of chefs. But staff were quick to adapt their teaching online, demonstrating cooking techniques in their own kitchens, uploading tutorials to YouTube and creating spaces for students to socialise, finds Carly Page.

When stay-at-home orders forced restaurants across the UK to close their doors, chefs, front-of-house staff and kitchen porters were not the only ones affected. The shutdown also had a huge impact on catering colleges, and the aspiring chefs and caterers they train.

Hospitality research group CGA reports that sales in the sector plummeted by more than £53 billion in 2020, leaving many restaurants and catering companies struggling. They had to find creative solutions to survive, with many restaurants providing click-and-collect, takeaway and meal-kit delivery services, while the catering industry focused on smaller events and, in some cases, virtual cooking classes.

But what about the next generation of chefs and caterers? Catering colleges, which typically rely on practical lessons to give students access to industry-standard equipment and valuable experience in a fast-paced environment, also had to adapt quickly.

"At first it was a bit of a novelty," says Miranda Godfrey, chef lecturer at Westminster Kingsway College. "But it was difficult for staff and students to get our heads around teaching online. We’re all very much hands-on, and for us to just be sitting behind a computer and then trying to navigate a new system was very challenging."

However, as staff adapted to this new way of teaching and became familiar with the technology, they began to experiment with live practical lessons, delivered remotely.

"When I first did it, I was really nervous and I had Post-it notes all over my wall," she says. "I cleaned my kitchen like I’d never cleaned it before!"

Students quickly got used to the live cooking demonstrations, she says, and attendance was high. "Engagement was very good and we got into a really good routine, I think because the students know that we’re all trying really hard."

"Students cook along and love it"

City of Liverpool College also provided its catering students with practical lessons, encouraging them to join in where possible. "I have been doing my cooking lessons from my kitchen," says Siobhan Sweet, a patisserie lecturer at the college.

"Sometimes students cook along and they love it. We send out a list of ingredients on Microsoft Teams the week before, and they cook along live in their kitchens so I can see what they’re doing. That works really well."

But what about those who didn’t have access to the facilities and equipment they needed to take part? Sweet says that lecturers who couldn’t teach from home were able to deliver sessions from campus and, for students who couldn’t join in, the college found ways to adapt its remote provision.

"They all had access to the Zooms, but you’ve got to be mindful of students’ kitchen facilities," Sweet says. "Some have five brothers and sisters running around, so they can’t cook along, and others haven’t got the right equipment. I also have some mature students who couldn’t have access to the kitchen at home."

who had their children at home and were homeschooling, so all my stuff is posted to YouTube, so they can watch it at their leisure.”

Lack of equipment and interrupting siblings might have posed problems here and there, but for some catering colleges, the move to remote teaching also brought unexpected benefits, such as opportunities for students to be more creative.

For instance, Activate Learning, which offers catering courses developed in partnership with Heston Blumenthal and the Fat Duck Group, adapted its curriculum to focus on opportunities for all students to experiment in their home kitchens.

“Heston Blumenthal sets great store by combining different flavour combinations, and our chefs encouraged students to raid their home cupboards to experiment with pairing different herbs and spices, or experimenting with cooking times to test the tastes, textures and flavours of their creations,” Nancy Buckley, director of career pathways for Activate’s lifestyles faculty, explains.

“We also devised various challenges that students were able to deliver from within their own kitchens at home, including the ‘dunking biscuit challenge’ [creating the perfect biscuit to dunk in a cup of tea] and designing an Easter egg using home chocolate moulds, such as a balloon or other utensils, to shape their chocolate.”

Sean Owens, WorldSkills UK’s training manager for cooking, says that another benefit has been having the opportunity to introduce new methods of assessment. He gives the example of using the hedonic taste scale, which his students used for self-assessment when they were cooking at home.

The hedonic scale consists of a series of nine verbal categories, representing degrees of “liking” from “dislike extremely” to “like extremely.” Students use the scale to categorise foods based on their taste preferences, which sounds easier than it is, Owens points out.

“It takes integrity as a student,” he says. “But what I’ve noticed about my students is that there’s a level of maturity (now) that wasn’t there before.”

Activate Learning also took a new approach to how it measures the performance of its catering students during lockdown.

“As part of our programme, we devised a curiosity journal, in conjunction with Heston, for students to record their outputs, so they can share their results with their tutors and fellow classmates on their online class calls.

“We also asked students to film themselves at home and share the videos, so that our tutors were able to see them at work and observe what they were doing,” Buckley explains.

“The journals have been particularly useful as they prompt the students to practise and, if they fail, repeat dishes; offer a glossary of terms for describing their dishes; draw their final plated creations and write up recipes.”

Can cook, will cook
But despite these innovations, there has still been a major gap in colleges’ provision: hands-on industry experience. This continues to be particularly difficult to overcome, as restaurants remain closed across the country.

But colleges have been doing their best. “Obviously, the ability for students to gain experience through work placements has been very limited this year,” Buckley says. “So our hospitality and catering team redeployed its work experience coordinators and business engagement specialist towards sourcing virtual placements, quality pre-recorded demonstrations and online employer engagement opportunities.”

As well as offering virtual placements, it has also been important for colleges to recreate the social elements of workplace and on-campus learning, Godfrey says, by building into remote provision opportunities for learners to socialise.

“From the beginning of the last lockdown, we’ve been doing a social meet-up that’s also a cook-along,” she explains. “Any students can join us and we also have guest alumni as well. Students who are overseas, like in South Korea and Canada, have been able to join, too. We just meet up and cook – and it’s not a class, it’s just to chat and something for students to look forward to.”

Sweet agrees that the social element of courses has been really important to recreate, even if that means just allowing students a bit of unstructured time for an informal chat.

“We have a bit of a social aspect to it, too. We’ll all join the Zoom call and have a chat before the lesson starts,” she says.

And while staff and students are glad to finally be able to socialise again on campus, there are some aspects of the new normal that catering lecturers hope will continue beyond the pandemic.

“I think the blended learning approach will stay with us,” Godfrey says. “Our theory classes will become online classes. We recognise the fact that it’s expensive to come into London, so if we’re able to save students and teachers a day’s travel, that’s good for everyone.

“I’m going to keep my social cook-alongs, too, although I may change that to a weekend. I enjoy it and the students have enjoyed it, so I don’t want them to think it’s just going to stop. After all, we don’t know what’s going to happen next winter; we might have other lockdowns.

“And the messaging system through Teams – which students have on their phones – is a really direct way of being able to contact students, and I think that will stay.”

Sweet, too, expects hybrid learning to remain and believes it could prove particularly beneficial to students who are not able to attend in-person lessons, and can instead look to a bank of recorded lessons and online recipes.

Owens agrees. “I think it’s a fantastic opportunity to be able to capture, particularly cookery demonstrations and culinary school classes, and get them out into the industry, especially at a junior level.

“Colleges are blazing the trail,” he continues. “Really high-quality industry chefs have been joining colleges to demonstrate their skills. That’s something I would like to see afterwards, when we do have less use for Zoom and Teams.”

Timetabling for social distancing

Prepare for the gradual return to face-to-face learning

Navigating social distancing for the eventual return to face-to-face learning creates a difficult puzzle for schools, but it doesn’t have to be that way.

Edval Timetable’s quick and intuitive software can help your school stagger your return to face to face learning, create a Social Distance Schedule, and continue a blended learning approach, without losing control over your timetable.

Varndean School is seeking to recruit a Headteacher following the retirement of our current Head.

Varndean is an 11-16 maintained, comprehensive school with around 1400 students, set in a picturesque south coast location in the vibrant and diverse city of Brighton and Hove. Rated Good by Ofsted (2017), Varndean on most measures achieved the best results in Brighton and Hove in 2019. We are over-subscribed and growing.

Our ethos is rooted in the belief that providing a caring and supportive environment for our students is crucial to the achievement of academic success. This is delivered through our Five Schools system: five smaller schools within one larger school, each the size of a primary school, providing emotional and pastoral support.

Also key to Varndean’s ethos is our broad and diverse curriculum offering. Our aim is to enable students to achieve their potential in whatever sphere they aspire to or excel in. Our vision is for Varndean to deliver World Class Learning to all our students.

Varndean equally recognises the importance of helping its staff achieve their full potential, and encourages their continuous professional development. It is notable for example that four previous deputy headteachers have moved to substantive headteacher posts and one to become CEO of a Multi Academy Trust.

Applications are invited from candidates with substantial experience of senior leadership in a secondary school with the dynamism and charisma to lead us to achieving our World Class vision, by building on our successes and ethos.

Lawrence Sheriff School is a grammar school of nearly 1000 students. We have 600 boys in Years 7-11 and approximately 400 students in our mixed sixth form. We believe that much of our success, including our consistently high Ofsted grading and high rankings in DfE performance tables, can be directly linked to our emphasis upon LSS being a happy place to work for both pupils and staff.

The 2013 Ofsted report goes on to say that ‘the school is a harmonious community where students with different needs can thrive; achieve highly in their academic work and enjoy a wide range of enrichment opportunities.’ These comments sum up the distinctive ethos and values of the school.

Peter Kent will be retiring at the end of December 2021 after 23 years as Headteacher of LSS. We are looking to appoint an outstanding Headteacher who can build upon the values of high achievement, innovation, outward facing partnership and happiness that have characterised the school.

This is a very special opportunity to lead a heavily over-subscribed single academy trust that is currently undertaking a programme of expansion and growth and which has numerous exciting plans for the future.

Please contact the school to arrange a tour and conversation with the current Headteacher.

Assistant Principal (Behaviour and Attendance)

Salary: £52,723 - £64,143 per year (L10 - L18)

Trinity Academy Sowerby Bridge is an ambitious and inclusive 11-16 school that has 800 pupils on roll and is over-subscribed in years 7, 8 and 9. Following a period of support from Trinity MAT, the school formally joined the Trust in 2018. There has since been significant improvement in outcomes, meaning the academy can now be recognised as one of the most improved schools in the country.

Aspirations and ambitions are high; however, the school is determined not to rest on its laurels and is continually striving for ways to better serve the students. It is now seeking to appoint an exceptional Assistant Principal to be part of that and to provide the strategic leadership for all aspects of Behaviour and Attendance.

This is a fantastic opportunity for a high-performing individual with the strategic vision to further raise standards of student attainment and achievement across the academy, providing strong leadership for the pastoral team and taking responsibility for student attendance.

If you are a senior leader in a secondary setting, with the vision to drive the strategic direction and development of the academy’s student attendance and behaviour, this role offers an outstanding opportunity to play a key role in the further development of Trinity Academy Sowerby Bridge. You must be fully committed to optimising the opportunities that are available to children and young people, secure in the knowledge that you will be joining an ambitious forward-thinking Academy Trust. The successful candidate must be passionate about improving students’ life chances through the provision of the highest quality of education and committed to achieving excellent results for the students. You must have a strong work ethic and high expectations of yourself and others, with the ability to lead staff and students in realising these expectations.

Teacher of Special Needs

Salary: MPS + SEN 1 (Inner London rate)
Contract: Full Time
Location: Haringey
Contract Term: Permanent
Start Date: September 2021 or before

We wish to appoint a class teacher with an outstanding track record who is ambitious and ready for an exciting new challenge.

The Grove is a successful, new Special School opened in September 2018, which meets the needs of pupils aged 5 to 19 on the autistic spectrum. We opened our doors to 42 pupils in 2018 and have grown to 94 pupils currently and set to grow to 104 pupils next September. We are in a brand new refurbished school which has been designed around our pupils and offers specialist facilities to support our curriculum.

We are looking for a teacher to initially join our secondary department, working with youngsters with complex needs arising from autism. Ideally you could provide a subject specialist in maths or science but you would also need to teach across subject areas to ensure breadth of the curriculum.

This is a rare opportunity to be involved in the journey of a new school, as a member of our team you will be part of the development and planning process. If you relish in being able to make your mark with innovative and creative practice and you are excited about making a real difference, then this role will provide you with the scope to achieve this.

The post holder will be responsible for leading a class team ensuring there are high quality and effective learning opportunities for all students. Class sizes are small and our experienced teams offer support with a collaborative approach to teaching. The post holder will also be expected to work closely with our multi-disciplinary teams.

Please contact our Office team, at hr@heartlands.haringey.sch.uk. Unfortunately, we are unable to show candidates around during this time but we are happy to answer any questions that you may have or have a Zoom conversation with you.

Application packs can be downloaded from TES online website: www.tes.co.uk/jobs.

Completed application forms, with a covering letter addressed to the Headteacher, Mr Lucia Santi, should be submitted via Tes portal by the latest 10am on Tuesday 20th April. Interviews will take place on the 27th, 28th and 29th April.

The Grove, part of the Heartlands community trust is committed to safeguarding and promoting the welfare of our children and young people. The successful applicant will therefore be required to complete a DBS check. We encourage applications from all sections of the community to reflect our diverse student population.

ST JOHN’S SCHOOL

ST JOHN’S SCHOOL LEATHERHEAD

SPECIALIST TEACHER

Required September 2021

We are looking for an enthusiastic and experienced Specialist Teacher to join our collaborative and successful Learning Development Department. This post can be offered as a full time or part time role. The position demands high professional standards and excellent subject knowledge in order to assess and support pupils with a range of SpLD profiles.

The successful candidate will have a secondary-level teaching qualification and a postgraduate qualification (Level 7 or equivalent) in the teaching of pupils with SpLD.

This is a fantastic opportunity to join a fun, forward-thinking School which is committed to academic excellence, continual development of staff, and innovative teaching and learning strategies.

Further details and an application form are available from our website www.stjohnsleatherhead.co.uk or by contacting our HR Department on 01737 231426, email recruitment@stjohns.surrey.sch.uk

WEAVERS ACADEMY

Creative Education Trust

Teacher of Art

MPS/UPS

We have a growing reputation in the local area as a caring school with high expectations of learning, behaviour and attendance.

This post is new due to the growth in student numbers and the need to expand the number of teachers within Creative Arts.

As one of the most improved schools in the UK last year we attribute our success to our emphasis on coaching and professional development. Staff have considerable access to a broad range of opportunities to further develop their practice. We are on-going participants in a number of programmes including ‘Teaching Leaders’, Olevi’s ‘Outstanding Teacher Programme’ and ‘Future Leaders’. In addition, our staff have abundant opportunities to debate their practice through the ‘Breakfast Learning Team’ and to participate in school-to-school development as part of the growing multi-academy trust (SAT) that is well supported by leaders in education across the county.

Please note we will only accept applications from those who have QTS or are on a programme leading to QTS.

Please send your completed application form and covering letter to our HR Manager at the following address: Weavers Academy, Broad Hill Road, Wellingborough, NN8 3JH.

Applications by email are welcomed and should be sent to: HRManager@weaversacademy.org.uk or enquiries@weaversacademy.org.uk. CVs alone are not accepted.

26 MARCH 2021 Tes 75
Teacher of Computing

St. Bede’s School
Carlton Road, Redhill, Surrey RH1 2LQ

Starting September 2021
Salary: £26,948 - £42,780 per year
Full Time - Permanent

We are seeking to appoint a full-time teacher of computing to join our successful and expanding Computing Department. The successful candidate will have the skills, expertise and passion to help develop the curriculum, and enthuse our students to achieve across KS3, 4 and 5.

The post would suit an experienced teacher seeking a new challenge or an NQT who would benefit from a well established programme of induction year support.

The department is a popular choice for students at both KS4 and KS5, with numbers increasing in all courses. We currently offer GCSE Computing (OCR) and Cambridge National L2 IT at KS4. In KS5, students study A Level Computer Science and the Cambridge Technical in IT.

The GCSE results are very good and compare favourably with national averages with 64% of students achieving 9-4. The A Level Computer Science course is relatively new and we achieved good results with our first cohort. This is an area we are developing with increased numbers opting for the subject.

The department provides numerous opportunities for pupils to stretch their understanding of the subjects away from lessons. These include visits to the National Computing Museum at Bletchley Park and both lunchtime and after school clubs.

If you would like to apply please visit www.tes.com/jobs and click ‘Quick Apply’.

Closing date: 19th April 2021

Our school is committed to the safeguarding of children so all appointments are subject to a satisfactory enhanced disclosure check with the Disclosure and Barring Service. We will only consider applications made on our standard form.

Head of Computer Science

Main Professional Scale or Upper Pay Scale + TLR

The Judd School is a high performing boys’ grammar school which is enriched by a mixed sixth form. Our 2015 Ofsted Report deemed us to be Outstanding in all areas. We are seeking to appoint a knowledgeable and enthusiastic Head of Department to support the unique identity of our school.

This is a fantastic time to be joining the school, as the department is at a pivotal moment in its young history. It is about to launch at A Level, after several years of self-taught classes at GCSE and A Level, then only recently with taught lessons in Years 10 and 11. We have over 100 students in Year 10 studying towards their GCSE and over 50 about to receive their grades this summer.

Further details about the school can be found at www.judd.online. If you require any further information about the vacancy please telephone Mrs Diane O’Grady, PA to the Headteacher on 01732 373550.

Applications must be made directly through the TES website. Please ensure you complete full employment and education history, including grades achieved at all levels.

Employment type: Full-time

Salary: MPS & UPS + TLR (dependent on the experience of the successful candidate)

Closing date: Thursday 31st March 2021

Date of interviews: After Easter (however it is possible we will interview earlier than the closing date for the right candidates)

Position start date: September 2021

Early applications are very much encouraged; the school reserves the right to interview before the closing date.

Previous applicants for this role do not need to reapply.

The Judd School is committed to the safeguarding and welfare of young people and expects all staff to share this commitment. Our commitment is underpinned by robust processes and procedures that seek to minimise risk and continuously promote a culture of safeguarding amongst our workforce.

All posts within the school are subject to an enhanced DBS check. We welcome applications from all sections of the community, regardless of gender, race, religion, disability, sexual orientation or age.

Teacher of Mathematics

Full Time, Permanent  |  Salary: MPS-UPS  |  Starting September 2021

We are seeking a talented, creative and innovative Mathematics specialist to join our very successful Mathematics team. Mounts Bay Academy is a caring and dynamic Academy where students are placed at the centre of everything we do. We provide a broad and balanced curriculum to all our students, who are set challenging academic and personal targets and given the inspiration to succeed.

Applications are welcome from colleagues who have a deep knowledge of their subject area. We want you to show us that you understand how concepts, content and knowledge is organised and delivered; we want to know that you are up-to-date with what expert colleagues and specialist organisations are saying and it is really important that you are passionate about sharing this with colleagues and students.

Is this post the right one for you? It is if:
• you are someone who can think critically about pedagogy and specialist-specific approaches
• you are ambitious for students as well as yourself
• you value and use research to extend your own repertoire in order to develop and coach others
• it is your practice to use a wide range of pedagogical approaches because you can see their relevant in different contexts
• you can articulate and justify the reasons why each might be used.

Specifically, we are interested in skilled practitioners who appreciate and understand the preconceptions and misconceptions students may have about a topic/area of study. Successful candidates will be able to show that they not only have a clear understanding of possible barriers to learning, but that they know how to select and use appropriate strategies to overcome these, especially for students with SEND and for those from disadvantaged backgrounds.

Application forms and information packs are available via our school website or upon request by telephoning the Academy.

Ashlyns is a popular and oversubscribed school in the historic market town of Berkhamsted. Situated on magnificent grounds, the school blends beautiful listed buildings with a modern and exciting development. It has undergone significant refurbishment in recent years with continuing improvements in progress as we expanded to eight forms of entry in September 2017.

The school was rated ‘Good’ by Ofsted in May 2018 and is focused on rapid improvement in results with the aspiration to be rated ‘Outstanding’ at our next inspection. We encourage applicants to read the report, which can be found on the school website (www.ashlyns.herts.sch.uk).

Ashlyns is a thriving school with a fascinating and rich heritage. Originally established to provide for the most vulnerable in society, the school continues to emphasise the traditional values of respect, honesty, and hard work. These values, combined with high expectations, innovation, and creativity, mean that Ashlyns is a school that encourages students to develop and make the most of their abilities and interests.

TEACHER OF MATHEMATICS

Salary: GBP £25,714 - £41,604 per year (MPS/UPS)

Start date: 01 September 2021

Lansdown Park Academy is part of the Learn@ Multi Academy Trust. We are a specialist Academy for Key Stage 1 - 4 students who have been permanently excluded or close to permanent exclusion from Mainstream School across Bristol and BAfES. Most of our young people attend with us on a short term basis however some young people remain with us for longer. Some young people that join us have underlying SEN needs including SEMH, SLCN and/or ASD. We recognise the importance of an inclusive approach to meeting young people’s needs and promoting their learning.

The main personal attributes we are looking for is the capacity to enthuse, engage and inspire our young people through a deep understanding of the curriculum content and concepts with the ability to enliven the subject to meet a range of needs. Due to the nature of our young people and historic gaps in education, this post requires a good knowledge and understanding of the subject and exam frameworks to identify gaps in learning and provide accurate individualised targets to ensure pupils progress and learning are in line with their mainstream peers. This post represents an excellent opportunity for either a teacher eager to enter special school teaching or someone already experienced in this sphere of education. If you are an outstanding practitioner who is passionate about making learning effective and enjoyable, have the highest levels of integrity as well as excellent communication skills and can contribute to our journey in driving forward Maths in order to facilitate learning experiences that gives young people the opportunity to achieve their individual potential.

Ark Soane Academy

Part Time Music Teacher for Ark Soane Academy

Location: Acton, London — a five minute walk from Acton Town tube station
Start: September 2021
Salary: M1-UPS
Contract: Part-time hours, permanent contract

Opportunity for an exceptional teacher to be a founding middle leader, shaping a brand new Ark secondary school in Baling
Ark Soane Academy is a new secondary school in Acton opening in September 2021 to year 7 initially and growing each year. Our aim is to transform children’s lives through an excellent education. Our teachers will be supported to uphold the very highest standards of behaviour through centralised systems, and to teach exceptional lessons through shared planning.
We are recruiting a founding team of exceptional staff to achieve our vision and work together to create a genuinely outstanding school. The new music teacher will work closely with the central Ark Music team to shape music provision at Ark Soane. This is an exciting opportunity for an energetic teacher who is passionate about music and committed to challenging every pupil to achieve their potential.

Teaching experience will not be a determining factor - we welcome applications from NQTs as well as more experienced candidates. We will develop every staff member that joins our team, providing one-to-one support, coaching and mentoring and access to extensive network training.

Additional teaching and learning responsibilities would be available for the right candidate.

The ideal candidate will:
- Have a strong academic background, with good A Levels or equivalent, and a good degree
- Combine subject matter expertise with a passion for teaching music
- Share the Ark Soane vision and be aligned with the six pillars underpinning it.
- Value and support practices driving continued progress across the network of Ark schools.

To apply please go to https://arkonline.org/careers

Please submit your application by 17th April 2021. For further information, a confidential discussion or any technical queries please contact Matt Neuberger, the Principal, at m.neuberger@arklondon.org

Closing Date: 17th April 2021
Interviews: To be confirmed

We value diversity and are committed to safeguarding and promoting child welfare. The successful candidate will be subject to DBS and any other relevant employment checks.
Teacher of Performing Arts

MPS/UPS • Full time • Required for September 2021

The Wellington Academy opened in 2009 to serve Tidworth, Ludgershall and the surrounding area - an area with a significant military presence. Consequently, we are proud to educate a large number of children from service families and with the growing super-garrison based on Salisbury plain we expect our numbers to continue to rise.

The Wellington Academy joined the Royal Wootton Bassett Academy Trust in 2011 and are following their approach to teaching which has seen them gain an outstanding rating by Ofsted. By joining the Trust, it brings a whole wealth of exciting CPD opportunities which is your right to undertake as a teacher as you develop in your career.

Our curriculum breadth is focused on ensuring every pupil is exposed to the widest range of subjects possible to enable them to leave school ready to achieve their dreams and fulfil their goals. Our vision for all our pupils is that they become inquisitive, ambitious and independent young adults and when they leave us, they will have the skills, knowledge and character they need to take them on to University or the workplace.

We are seeking to appoint a Teacher of Performing Arts with the ability to teach both Drama and Dance, who demonstrates an infectious passion for teaching their subject as well as supporting pupils to become the best version of themselves. We would welcome applications from experienced teachers or NQT’s. The successful applicant will have the opportunity to teach from KS3 to KS5.

Visits to The Wellington Academy are encouraged and can be arranged by emailing the HR team on HR@thewellingtonacademy.org.uk. All visits will take place after school hours.

If you believe you have the commitment and desire to work in an environment which values all staff as well as setting the highest standards and expectations then please apply using the Trust application form, available with more details from our website at www.thewellingtonacademy.org.uk.

Closing date: 9am, 26 March 2021 • Interviews week commencing 29 March 2021

The Trust is committed to safeguarding and promoting the welfare of children, young people and vulnerable adults and expects all staff and volunteers to share this commitment. All appointments are subject to references and an Enhanced DBS check before confirmation. Royal Wootton Bassett Academy Trust is an equal opportunities employer. The campus is a no smoking site.

TEACHER OF SCIENCE
Salary GBP £25,714 - £41,604 per year (MPS1 - UPS3)
Full Time, Permanent
Start date 01 September 2021
Lansdown Park Academy is part of the Learn@ Multi Academy Trust. We are a specialist Academy for Key Stage 1 - 4 students who have been permanently excluded or close to permanent exclusion from Mainstream School across Bristol and Bath. Most of your young people attend with us on a short term basis however some young people remain with us for longer. Some young people that join us have underlying SEN needs including SEMH, SLCN and/or ASD. We recognise the importance of an inclusive approach to meeting young people’s needs and promoting their learning.

The main personal attributes we are looking for is the capacity to enthuse, engage and inspire our young people through a deep understanding of the curriculum content and concepts with the ability to enliven the subject to meet a range of needs. Due to the nature of our young people and historic gaps in education, this post requires a good knowledge and understanding of the subject and exam frameworks to identify gaps in learning and provide accurate individualised targets to ensure pupils progress and learning are in line with their mainstream peers. This post represents an excellent opportunity for either a teacher eager to enter special school teaching or someone already experienced in this sphere of education. If you are an outstanding practitioner who is passionate about making learning effective and enjoyable, have the highest levels of integrity as well as excellent communication skills and can contribute to our journey in driving forward Science in order to facilitate learning experiences that gives young people the opportunity to achieve their individual potential.

Head of Physics

Working Hours: Full Time, Permanent
Start date: 1st September 2021

Dunottar is a co-educational school for pupils aged 11-18 set in extensive grounds of 15 acres on the outskirts of Reigate. With a new Headmaster in September 2017, the school is on a very exciting journey. The school is experiencing fast growth in pupil numbers and it is undertaking a £6.6 million capital development programme to accommodate future growth. Our new Sixth Form centre was completed in May 2019, with our new whole school Assembly Hall scheduled for completion in October 2020.

Dunottar is a great place to work, with a team of highly professional and committed teachers and support staff. We incorporate best practice from independent schools and academies right across the United Learning Group, whilst retaining our unique, friendly ethos in Reigate where pupils are nurtured to make significant personal progress at the same time as achieving excellent academic results. United Learning is an organisation which prides itself on providing a working and learning environment which encourages ‘the best in everyone’. You will join a network of staff belonging to 88 other schools, with opportunities to engage with fellow professionals which far exceed what one school could achieve on its own. Personal development and career opportunities are excellent.

Overview

We are looking to employ a well-qualified and inspirational teacher on a part-time basis for September 2021. The contract is for a timetable of approximately 0.5 FTE and the working pattern will be discussed at interview.

The Modern Foreign Languages Department is a forward thinking department which seeks to enthuse the pupils through outstanding and innovative teaching. Pupils study French and Spanish at Key Stage 3. At GCSE pupils take at least one language and follow the AQA course and at A Level the Edexcel course is followed. At Key stage 4 and above, pupils have the opportunity to have a conversation lesson with a language assistant.

The MFL department runs a number of trips and enrichment opportunities including established links with partner schools in Madrid and Angers, and a desire to be involved in these aspects of the life of the school is essential for the successful candidate. We are a friendly, welcoming and supportive department which achieves excellent results through innovation but also collaboration and a collegiate approach. We work as a team and very much look forward to continue growing as such.

For more information on this role please see our online advert on tes.com/jobs and to apply click the ‘Quick apply’ link at the bottom of the page.

Closing Date: 28 March 2021
The School reserves the right to make an appointment at any stage during the recruitment process.
We seek to appoint a Director of Rugby who will lead, manage and deliver Uppingham’s rugby programme and play a central role in the development of rugby at the School, guiding and supporting our rugby teams and coaching staff.

Rugby is a hugely popular sport at Uppingham. Many pupils play for enjoyment but want to be as proficient in the game as they can be. Others aspire to play rugby at the highest level. All of them want to enjoy playing the sport.

You will ensure that players of all abilities are able to reach their potential, whether that is facilitating opportunities for aspirational players whose talents can take them to county, regional or national level, or enabling a player to advance within our own team structure.

If you are an outstanding and inspirational coach who ideally has experience of playing or coaching rugby at the highest level, we would be delighted to hear from you. A strong (sport) degree is desirable and exemplary coaching qualifications are necessary.

For further details please visit uppingham.co.uk/opportunities

Closing date: Monday 12 April 2021, 9.00am.

Uppingham School is committed to safeguarding and promoting the welfare of children. Successful candidates must be willing to undergo full screening in accordance with Keeping Children Safe in Education (KCSiE), including an Enhanced Disclosure and Barring Service check. Issues relating to safeguarding and promoting the welfare of pupils will be explored at interview.

The Lower School includes Early Years (Pre-Nursery to Reception) and the Pre-Prep School (Y1-Y5). It encourages students to become independent learners; from taking a greater role in their own personal organization to increasing their ability for independent thought and responsibility for their own learning. Students entering Early Years’ experience a vibrant and lively learning environment. Concepts essential to forming a strong foundation in basic skills are explored on a daily basis and the integrated day is conducive to exploration, enquiry and interaction both in and outside the classroom. In the Pre-Prep School, students experience a more formal structure to the School day with discrete subject lessons, an increased number of specialist lessons and an extra-curricular programme. Throughout both phases there is a strong emphasis on Language and Learning and many of the students speak English as a second language. An ability to support Language learning would be a significant advantage.

We seek to employ teachers in the Lower School with the ability and commitment to enhance the life of an ‘all through School’, and to work effectively and collaboratively in a team dedicated to further establishing and developing the School. The Lower School team aims to deliver a stimulating and challenging curriculum and the most important part of the role is the classroom teaching and associated pastoral care of the students. In addition to this, the School’s emphasis on activities outside the classroom means that an effective and varied contribution to the extra-curricular programme is also required. There is an after school “Lions Club” for students in EY and Y1 and a wider Enrichment Activity programme for students in Y2-Y5.

All Lower School teachers are offered two-year renewable contracts and a highly competitive compensation package, including on-site accommodation or equivalent accommodation allowance, annual flight and full medical insurance for employees and their dependents.

International teaching during this time is challenging and we are looking for new staff to address and grow from this experience. Currently schools in Qatar are working on a mixture of contact and online learning. The MOE is supporting schools to return to some normality and gradually returning to classroom learning. During this time we have had to adapt and support both staff and children in this different learning approach.

Durham School for Girls opened in 2019 and we now have nearly 1000 students. The school will expand again in 2021 with Year 11 and 12 and the first Year 13 students will start in 2022 with an expected growth to 1200 students.

Following in the footsteps of Durham School UK, Durham School for Girls Doha aims to continue the heritage of strong pastoral care, inclusion and individual progress that make the School “Distinctively Durham”. Within the school there will be a strong ethos based on the school philosophy and values. Centered around the girl’s individual development, we aim to ensure that we strive for a balance in both academic and personal, social development ensuring confidence for life.

Durham School for Girls Doha is the first British all-girls school in Qatar. Linked with the 2030 vision of empowerment for women, we aim to ensure an environment where girls can flourish and develop to reach their full potential. An finished and multipurpose campus provides the security for girls to develop individually, respect Qatari culture and values, and embrace the British system and methodology.

Being part of the Durham family, our pupils and staff can become part of the 600-year-old tradition and reputation of Durham UK. Although Durham School for Girls Doha works in a different community, a different country and a beautiful, modern building, the school culture that is Durham. A strong pastoral House system links to Durham UK and many synergies will unite the two schools, forming the sense of one school, two sites.

All Staff will be ready for the challenge of a new school and will be part of the school family and community. Like Durham UK, the staff will help to create and warm and secure learning environment where dedicated staff support and develop the girls in our school.

This is going to be an exciting new time and a chance for staff to be part of something old, and something new.
Repton International (Malaysia) is seeking practitioners for the following Full time - Fixed term roles to start August 2021:

Teacher, Physics (Senior School & Sixth Form)

Teacher, Chemistry (Senior School & Sixth Form)

Teacher, Biology (Senior School & Sixth Form)

Teacher, Mathematics (Senior School & Sixth Form)

Teacher (Junior School)

Part of the Repton family of schools, Repton International (Malaysia) is a British International K-12 school in Johor Bahru. We provide an exceptional broad-based education in impressive 21st century facilities, which blends tradition and heritage with innovation and the pursuit of excellence. The school prioritises high quality teaching and pastoral care. The school is fully accredited by the International Baccalaureate Organization (IBO) for grades 12 and 13. And is also a fully accredited Cambridge IGCSE school.

Repton Malaysia opened its doors in September 2020 and the next two to three years will focus on taking the school to a new level of academic and institutional excellence to achieve its mission of “preparing students for higher education by inspiring academic excellence, intellectual curiosity, effective communication, service, and integrity.” With clear leadership and long-range planning, the school will continue to grow as a school focused on quality education for all students.

We are seeking highly motivated, talented teachers to join our journey as we seek to establish ourselves as one of the premium educators in Malaysia. Our teachers enable pupils to flourish and develop, both in and out of the classroom, by equipping them with the skills, qualities and values they will need to lead a successful and purposeful life.

The school campus is located in Johor Bahru within close proximity to Singapore, Thailand, and Vietnam. Expatriate families living in Johor appreciate the excellent modern infrastructure, safety and security, beautiful beaches, green spaces, and easy access to South East Asia and Australia.

As well as the school in Johor Bahru, the Repton family of schools includes the three UK Schools (Repton School, Repton Prep and St Wystan’s), two schools in Dubai, one school in Abu Dhabi, and one in Xiamen, China. There are a further four schools due to open over the next few years.

The Royal Grammar School Guildford in Qatar (RGSQ) opened in September 2016 with the Early Years Foundation Stage and Key Stage 1. Based on the same principles as RGS Guildford, UK, RGSQ Qatar has quickly gained a reputation for providing outstanding education and enrolment has increased across the school. RGS Qatar currently educates girls and boys from Nursery to Year 10 on an attractive campus 10 minutes’ drive north of central Doha. Having established an excellent team of staff and outstanding facilities the school has opened to Year 10 in August 2020.

We are looking for teachers of Mathematics with experience of GCSE/GCSE who are comfortable teaching from Year 7 to Year 11. A level experience would be a bonus, but the school will not operate a Sixth Form until 2022/23.

This role will include teaching an additional subject for the first year of employment which will be discussed at interview for shortlisted candidates. In addition to providing teachers with the opportunity to be part of one of the UK’s most successful schools, we offer a very competitive package.

Interested candidates should apply through the TES Portal. However the school reserves the right to make an early appointment prior to the closing date.

Closing Date: 19 April 2021

The RGS is committed to safeguarding and promoting the welfare of children and young people. Applicants must be willing to undergo child protection screening, including reference checks with previous employers.
Teacher of English
September 2021

About the Role:
We are looking for a Teacher of English to join our existing team at GEMS Winchester School, Fujairah from September 2021.

This is a fantastic opportunity for English teachers to start or continue their international career with a leading global company and world-class international school located in the beautiful Emirate of Fujairah. Experience of teaching A-Level English would be an advantage, as would a sound understanding of the needs of EAL learners.

Due to the continued success of the school and significant roll growth, we are looking for passionate, dynamic colleagues who are ambitious to join a company in GEMS that has an enviable reputation for outstanding education, and a school that will continue to grow to meet our community’s needs. Middle management positions and responsibility allowances may be available for suitably experienced and qualified candidates.

In return for your energy, resilience and experience, we offer you the opportunity to make a real impact on a developing community. You will work with the UAE’s largest and most successful education company, which will support your professional and career development and you will work with a supportive Senior Leadership Team at WSF who will help you develop your potential.

Successful applicants will have:
• Exposure to teaching KS3, KS4 and KS5.
• Strong experience of teaching the UK National Curriculum.
• A certified teaching qualification, such as BEd, PGCE, PGDE or equivalent (PGCE/PGDE must be accompanied by a subject relevant Bachelor’s Degree).
• The desire to provide outstanding teaching and learning.
• An aspiration to work in a world-class school with real prospects for enhancing their career.
• At least 3 years of post-qualifying experience.

Closing Date: 16th April 2021
